PREFACE

This data listing forms the basis for analyses to be made on the trends in abundance of Steller sea lions and California sea lions during this century and the effects which control kills had on abundance (see Bigg in prep. a; in prep. b). It also provides information to fishery officers, biologists, industrial developers and the general public, who wish to know about the abundance of these species at particular locations.

Data in this report may be cited without my prior written consent.

INTRODUCTION

Two species of sea lion occur in British Columbia, the Steller sea lion (Eumetopias jubatus) and California sea lion (Zalophus californianus). The Steller sea lion is a year-round resident which congregates on local breeding rookeries mainly in June-July and disperses along the coast in winter. In summer, it currently totals about 6,000. The California sea lion is a winter migrant to southern British Columbia from summer breeding sites off California and Mexico. It numbers about 1,600.

Both species interfere with local commercial fisheries to some extent although the main historical concern has been with Steller sea lions. This species preys on salmon and halibut and disrupts fishing by damaging gear and captured fish. Both species disperse schools of herring and enter nets during the herring gillnet and seine fisheries and both are suspected of feeding on inshore stocks of cod. To reduce damage done by Steller sea lions, particularly to the salmon fishery, population control programs were undertaken in 1912-68. This involved kills by fishery officers, bounties and commercial uses for carcasses. Concern about low numbers resulted in protection in 1970 for both species. Only since the early 1970's have California sea lions increased in number sufficiently to be considered a nuisance.

Over the years various agencies and individuals have collected numerous records on abundance and kills of sea lions. Most records remain unpublished. In this report I compile the available unpublished and published data collected in British Columbia during 1892-1982. The purpose is to facilitate studies on distribution, abundance, and movements. The compilation involved a detailed examination of historical records located in the files of government agencies and individuals in British Columbia and records given in the literature. Methods of data collection by each source and possible kinds of errors and biases in the data are described. Also listed are historical and recent data on abundance at nearby sites in southeastern Alaska and in Washington which were collected during studies based in British Columbia, as well as from the literature.

DATA SOURCES

Table 1 summarizes the dates, locations, survey methods and sources for the important censuses. Table 2a summarizes the dates, locations, numbers killed and purpose for the main killing operations. Most kills occurred on the Sea Otter Group, Scott Islands and Cape St. James. These sites are the principal rookeries in British Columbia.

There were 10 sources of data:

1. Fisheries Research Branch, Department of Fisheries and Oceans, at the Pacific Biological Station, Nanaimo, British Columbia and Arctic Biological Station, Ste Anne de Bellevue, Quebec.

Most census and some kill data came from this source. The first study of Steller sea lions by this source was in 1916 when C. Fraser of the (Pacific) Biological Station, Nanaimo, undertook a joint census with C. F. Newcombe and H. Greenwood of the British Columbia Provincial Fisheries Department, Victoria (Newcomb, et al. 1918). It consisted of a survey by boat of the main breeding sites off northern Vancouver Island, Rivers Inlet and southern Queen Charlotte Islands. The purpose was to determine whether a bounty imposed by the Department of Fisheries during 1915 had reduced the population in the Rivers Inlet area from high levels noted in 1913. Salmon cannery personnel from Rivers Inlet had also posted a bounty in 1914 and killed many. No killings occurred during the 1916 count. Thus, this census does not appear to be biased by the possibility that harassment drove some animals away from haulouts. Data were collected on the number of sea lions killed in 1913-16. We examined in detail these kill records and those at the Archives of the British Columbia Provincial Museum, Victoria. Totals for the number killed given in the current report differ somewhat from those summarized in the 1916 study as some computational errors appear to exist in the earlier report.

In 1956-67, G. Pike of the (Pacific) Biological Station, Nanaimo conducted boat, land and aerial surveys throughout British Columbia and on occasion into Washington and southeastern Alaska. This work was done as part of a larger study on the general biology of Steller sea lions, including the collection of specimens plus a kill on the rookery of North Danger Rocks in 1958 for experimental purposes to reduce the stock size. Too few California sea lions were present at this time for study. Census and kill data were reported in Pike and Maxwell (1958), Pike (1964) and Pike (1966). All pup counts were made visually. D. Spalding (Pender Island, British Columbia, pers. comm.) worked with G. Pike and provided sightings from his personal notes for this report. Some counts of postpups during 1956-67 may have been underestimated due to harassment during the commercial, management and research kills.

During 1971-82, my associates and I made numerous aerial censuses for Steller sea lions and California sea lions in British Columbia plus a few counts in Washington and at Forrester Island in southeastern Alaska. During 1971-77, these studies were conducted from the Pacific Biological Station, Nanaimo, although the research program was based at the Arctic Biological Station, Quebec. In these studies, all pup counts and most postpup counts were determined from aerial photographs. We used a DeHavilland Beaver or Cessna 172, 180 or 185 flown at an altitude of 150 m. Photographs were taken with a hand-held 35 mm SLR camera equipped with a 135 mm or 200 mm telephoto lens. The film used was Kodak Ektachrome 200 ISO or 400 ISO. Bigg (1973) summarized counts taken off southern Vancouver Island in 1971-72. Because both sea lion species were protected in 1970, none of the counts in 1971-82 were biased from possible harassment of sea lion during control programs.

2. Field Services Branch, Department of Fisheries and Oceans, Vancouver, British Columbia.

This source has most of the records on the number of sea lions killed as well as many incidental sightings. Data were collected during sea lion management kills and other fishery patrol vessel activities. Coast-wide censuses were made by boat and two aerial censuses were funded which were conducted by the Fisheries Research Branch. These records are contained in correspondence and field reports prepared by fishery officers. I examined all annual files for the period between 1880 and 1970. Records on abundance and kills occur only back to 1915. In that year, the Department of Fisheries imposed a bounty on sea lions off Rivers Inlet to reduce conflicts with local salmon fisheries. Continued pressure from fishermen in the Rivers Inlet area resulted in large-scale control programs at sea lion rookeries in the Sea Otter Group during 1922-39. Between 1936 and the late 1950's management kills were conducted progressively more broadly throughout British Columbia. Kills decreased between the early 1960's and 1968.

The accuracy of numbers reported killed is uncertain. The numbers of pups reported killed during 1922-39 may have been reasonably accurate. Fishery officers landed on rookeries and killed pups which had not yet learned to swim. A tally at the end of the kill probably accounted for all. The numbers reported for postpups killed was not as accurate because many deaths could not be confirmed with a carcass count. Sea lions which were hauled out or swimming were shot at from land and vessels. It was not possible to be certain whether an animal was injured and would die later or was even shot. The number killed was sometimes kept by recording the number of bullets used and estimating the proportion likely to have been killed. Based on conversations which I had with several fishery personnel, kill figures are probably somewhat too large.

The number of pups seen by fisheries officers were rarely distinguished in the total count. As with the censuses done by G. Pike, some counts may have been underestimates due to ongoing harassment of sea lions during control programs. Pike and Maxwell (1958) report most of the abundance and kill data collected by the Field Services Branch up to 1956.

3. Commercial killing operations

Data on commercial killing operations are housed in the files of the Field Services Branch, Vancouver. Individuals and companies which killed sea lions for commercial purposes were required to record the location and numbers taken annually. Many attempts were made to make use of sea lion carcasses, each meeting with only limited success. Most commercial operations took place on rookeries, where working conditions were extremely dangerous. Here the supply of sea lions seemed insufficient to sustain an industry. Also, the commercial products tended to have low value. The products included vibrissae and genitalia for Oriental markets, blubber for oil, hides for leather goods such as gloves and boots and, in the most successful venture, meat for mink food. Commercial kills up to 1938 concentrated on the collection of hides while those in 1952-66 were for mink food.

The number of sea lions recorded as killed during commercial operations were probably reasonably accurate. There was the motive to reduce losses from sinking. The numbers reported were based on the number known to be utilized plus the number estimated to be killed but not recovered. In some cases research personnel were involved in recording information on animals killed during 1959-66.

4. Commissioners of Fisheries, British Columbia Provincial Government, Victoria, British Columbia.

In 1913, the British Columbia Provincial Government commissioned C. F. Newcombe and his son W. A. Newcombe to undertake the first Steller sea lion study on abundance and conflicts with commercial fisheries. It was initiated in response to fishermen concerns about increasing numbers of sea lions, particularly in the Rivers Inlet area. A vessel cruise was made along much of the British Columbia coast to interview native people and fishermen and to count sea lions, principally on rookeries. It is the earliest documentation on the biology of Steller sea lions in British Columbia. The count was made while some killing was underway, thus harassment may have reduced the number hauled out at certain locations. The result of this survey was presented in Newcombe and Newcombe (1914). A second survey was conducted during 1916 in cooperation with the Fisheries Research Branch. A few references were made to the small numbers of California sea lions off southern Vancouver Island. Wailes and Newcombe (1929) gave a later review of Steller sea lion biology in British Columbia.

The original field notes of C. F. Newcombe were examined and additional sighting data were obtained for 1913-16. A few records in his correspondence files dated back to 1892. These notes are located at the Archives, British Columbia Provincial Museum, Victoria.

5. Department of Vertebrate Zoology, British Columbia Provincial Museum, Victoria, British Columbia.

Since the early 1970's, staff of the British Columbia Provincial Museum collected information on the number of sea lions seen during various vertebrate surveys taken along the coast. These records were visual counts from land and boats. Some records were included in this report.

6. H. D. Fisher, Department of Zoology, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, British Columbia.

H. D. Fisher and his graduate students undertook aerial photographic censuses during 1972-75. These data will be reported separately by H. D. Fisher and are not incorporated here. Behavioural studies were also conducted on Steller sea lions and on California sea lions. These projects were partially supported with grants from Fisheries Research Branch, Ottawa. Results of the behavioural studies are given in Harestead (1977, 1978), Harestead, and Fisher (1975), Brenton (1977), Edie (1977) and Fisher (1981).

7. British Columbia Fish and Wildlife Branch, Ministry of Environment, Victoria.

I. Smith, of the British Columbia Fish and Wildlife Branch, did aerial photographic surveys for sea lions off western Vancouver Island during 1970-71 (Smith 1972) and did a joint coast-wide census with the Fisheries Research Branch in December 1976. Sighting data from these counts are included in this report. Also included are some incidental sightings recorded by I. Smith during aerial surveys for other coastal vertebrates.

8. Other unpublished data

The principal remaining source of sightings is from people who, at the request of staff of the Fisheries Research Branch, recorded the numbers of sea lions seen at haulouts located near their homes. Telescopes and binoculars were used to make the counts. Keepers at the federal Department of Transport lighthouses kept extensive daily records. Personnel include C. Cehak - Race Rocks (1960-65); T. Anderson - Race Rocks (1966-79); K. Nuttal and L. Kowlaczyk - Pachena Point (1972-73); D. DeRousie - Carmanah Pt. (1980-81); and many anonymous keepers - Addenbrooke Point (1958-60), East Point (1958-62), Lennard Rocks (1962-63), McInnes Island (1963-64) and Sand Heads (1980-82). The daily records are so extensive that only the monthly maximum, mean, and standard error of the mean were listed here. Several other people collected numerous sightings. The largest number was collected by I. B. MacAskie (retired from marine mammals research at the Pacific Biological Station in 1978). He kept records for Ada Rocks during 1973-82. These are also summarized by month. The observers could not always see every sea lion hauled out as some rested behind rocks. An examination of the sites involved suggest that perhaps only 70-80% of sea lions were visible at times. Other observers include H. Richmond for Round Island (1972-77), and R. Hammond for Worlcombe Island (1979-82).

Also listed are a few sightings from a variety of other observers who were judged to have reliable counts. These observers include biologists, and coastal residents who sighted sea lions mainly in populous areas off southern British Columbia during 1971-82.

9. Other published sightings

The sources for other published records of sea lions seen in British Columbia, Washington and southeastern Alaska are given later in "Data Listing: e. Sources."

10 Missing data

Some kills occurred which remained undocumented. Fishermen occasionally shot sea lions which were interfering with their operations and also killed them on haulouts. Natives, particularly on the northern mainland coast, killed some for food. Military aircraft and vessels were requested by the Department of Fisheries to reduce sea lion numbers in remote areas by strafing and bombing haulouts. This occurred during World War II and in 1958. According to fishery officers, many animals were probably killed. Except for organized kills by fishermen during 1912-14 in Barkley Sound and Rivers Inlet, there is no evidence to indicate large scale kills by fishermen and natives during this century. Sea lions have not been an important source of food for native people since the late 1800's. The kills by fishermen and natives were probably a relatively insignificant source of mortality compared to the management and commercial kills.

Each of Tables 3-242 contains data from one location. Unless otherwise noted in the table headings, the site locations are in British Columbia. Historical place names which changed are converted to current usage. Locations are noted as to whether they were used by sea lions mainly as a haulout or swimming area and whether kills were for management, research or commercial purposes. Where a source gave abundance as a range, only the average was listed. Historical sighting data which were clearly unreliable were excluded. In a few cases judged to be warranted, single numbers recorded for a kill in several localities were divided and assigned equally among the localities. The kill numbers were examined to ensure no duplication by locality. While some localities overlap (eg. Folger Island and Barkley Sound) the numbers reported killed are exclusive of each other in the listing. Prior to 1970 very few California sea lions occurred in British Columbia and thus the kill records can be assumed to be composed essentially of Steller sea lions. The comment section includes a variety of general information such as the arrival and departure times noted by sources, page location for the published sources, date of first use for a site, summary statistics and correlations noted by the sources of sea lion arrival times with possible foods.

Tables 3-242 are presented in order of approximately progressive northern latitude within five regions of British Columbia. These regions are eastern Vancouver Island, western Vancouver Island, mainland coast, eastern Queen Charlotte Islands, and western Queen Charlotte Islands. Within each region are 2-3 subregions which are also arranged by order of progressively northern locations. The subregions contain all minor or miscellaneous sightings and kills. Each site where hauling out or swimming concentrations occurred is listed as a separate table. Both sighting and kill tables occur for the same important sites. Figures 1-5 give the location of regions, subregions and many sites mentioned in Tables 3-242. Also indicated are the sites which are rookeries, year-round haulouts, winter sites and abandoned sites used primarily by Stellar sea lions.

Figures 6-11 show the exact locations for all rookeries and year-round haulouts and some winter sites. The maps were traced from Canadian Hydrographic Survey charts, usually of the scale 1:37,500. Additional detail was provided from aerial photographs taken during censuses. All maps are drawn to the same scale and, except where noted, are aligned with true north to the top as shown in Figure 6a. Preferred resting places on each site are indicated. The relative number of sea lions currently using the site is indicated by the width of the arrow base. Sites where pupping occurs are noted with "P". The order of site presentation is from south to north within each region. Such detail about a site is valuable to know during aerial censuses when often only a few minutes are available to locate sea lions at a site.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I thank Graeme Ellis, Ian MacAskie, Michael Lough, and Peter Olesiuk for assistance in conducting sea lion surveys during 1971-82 and Kerry Hobbs and Ian Fawcett for help in compiling the data. Peter Olesiuk wrote the computer programs to list the data in tables and made constructive comments on the manuscript. Many other people gave generously of their time to collect sightings. Sherry Greenham and Kerry Hobbs prepared the Figures.
